Harry's skill behind the wheel of an LM P2 car was the revelation of the 2014 European Le Mans Series, best illustrated by his pole positions and the fact he was consistently the fastest LM P2 driver at Le Mans en route to a class win in the 24 hour endurance classic. His performance in 2014 belies the fact that Harry only moved from racing single-seaters to sports cars at the start of that year.

With a strong background in karting, Harry entered the world of single-seater racing at the end of 2008. He was quickly a contender in the Formula Renault UK Championship, becoming a regular on the podium. From Formula Renault, Harry moved up to Formula 3 - first in the British Series and then Europe, where the good results continued.

Harry has a reputation for being a fast and mistake-free driver, which is exactly what is required in the super-competitive world of LM P1 racing.
